LOCAL BUSINESSES WALLOPED WITH ENERGY SURCHARGES

By TAMARA GRIPPI

CALIFORNIA'S ENERGY crisis has moved off the front pages of the newspaper and onto the pages of customers' PG&E bills — where some local businesses have been hit with thousands of dollars in surcharges.

And some of Carmel's long-time shopkeepers, who have watched the price of electricity go up by at least one-third, wonder if the huge energy bills will force them out of business.

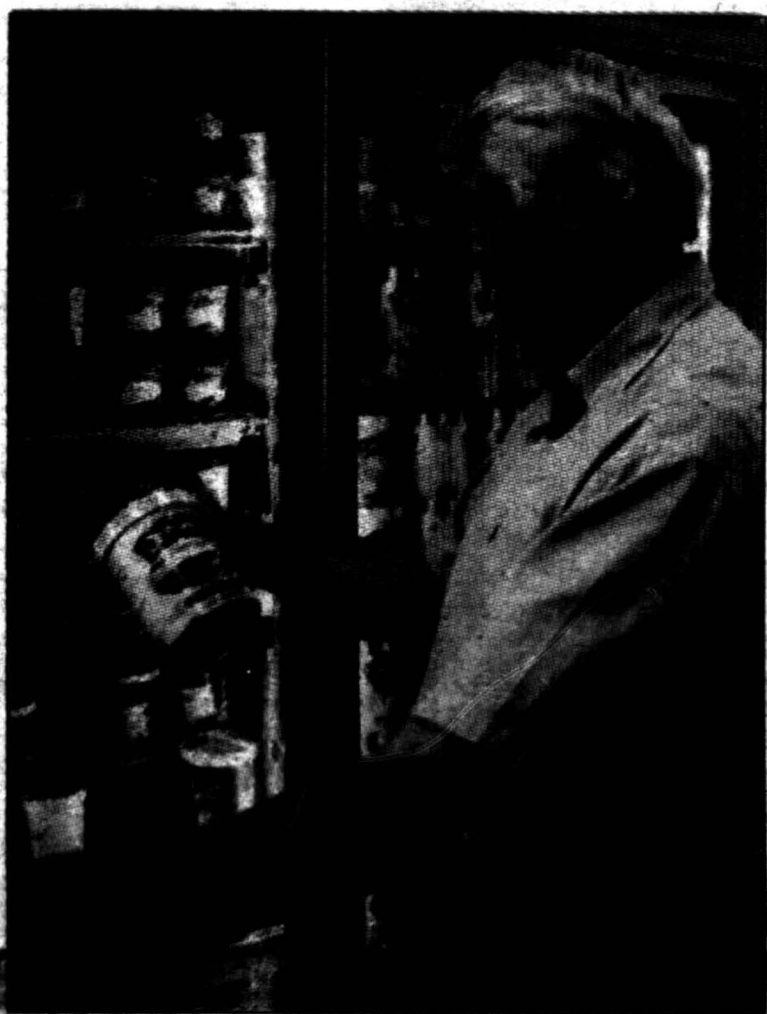

Merv Sutton, owner of Nielsen Bros. Market, said the bill at his grocery store is nearly $2,000 higher each month because of three new surcharges tacked on by the California Public Utilities Commission.

Instead of paying $3,000 a month for the energy it uses, Nielsen's has to pay $5,500.

"It's like flushing $2,000 down the drain each month," Sutton said. "I don't use any more electricity. Business is bad enough, but this is just driving me out of business."

Last year, the California Public Utilities Commission began placing the surcharges on customers — both residential and commercial — to cover the cost of long-term energy contracts purchased by the state during the electricity shortage. Later, it turned out the purchases weren't necessary, but the contracts, and the high prices, are still in effect.

with a $2,000 monthly surcharge, increasing its PG&E bill from approximately $6,000 to $8,000 a month.

Carmel Assistant City Administrator Greg D'Ambrosio said the surcharge translates to an energy charge increase from 9 cents to 15 cents per kilowatt hour, which is enough power to keep a 100-watt light bulb on for 10 hours.

County proposes metal flood barrier

By MARY BROWNFIELD

RESIDENTS OF a flood-prone neighborhood near the Carmel River lagoon got their first glimpse last week of a new plan to keep water out of their living rooms.

The idea — spearheaded by developer Alan Williams — is to erect a 3-foot-high wall of corrugated metal between the lagoon and adjacent residences, according to 5th District Supervisor Dave Potter.

When the Carmel River rises during winter storms, "the wall would contain the water in the lagoon to a level where the river could make its own opening to the ocean" instead of needing the help of a bulldozer, he explained.

That would solve all sorts of problems, according to Potter. The threat of flooding would decrease, the county's public works department wouldn't have to battle the elements and federal wildlife officials every year, and juvenile steelhead would remain in the lagoon for as long as possible before heading into the ocean.

"Basically, the wall would put us back to

City: Renter can't sue over porta-potties

By MARY BROWNFIELD

TWO PORTA-POTTIES installed next to Carmel Beach June 13 are not illegal, according to the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea's response to a lawsuit filed by a Texas resident earlier this month.

And even if the Scenic Road porta-potties — which replaced their torched predecessors — were illegal, a man who leases a house in the neighborhood could not sue Carmel over them anyway, according to city attorney Don Freeman.

In its response, the city argues that Geoffrey Raynor — the Fort Worth businessman who "leases or rents property across and down the street from the temporary restrooms and objects to seeing the alleged restrooms and to alleged odor arising from their operation and maintenance" — isn't entitled to file his lawsuit because he's not a Carmel property owner or even a resident of the state. Raynor also reportedly leases another Scenic Road home for his business.

"Yes, petitioner [Raynor] is in geographic proximity to the location of the temporary restrooms, but not one vested property right held by petitioner is impacted, as a matter of law, by the temporary restrooms," the city's response reads.

In the lawsuit he filed in Monterey County Superior Court the day after the California Coastal Commission granted the city a waiver to place the porta-potties at the south end of the beach, Raynor accused the city of bypassing public input, contradicting Carmel's General Plan and zoning codes, violating the municipal code and the Coastal Act, and ignoring the California Environmental Quality Act.

Freeman responded that a city employee can apply to another government agency for a permit without first holding a public hearing. The installation of the toilets was only briefly discussed during a report by city administrator Rich Guillen during the Carmel City Council's May 7 meeting and did not bypass the public hearing process because the council took no action.

"Staff regularly takes upon itself replacement of damaged or destroyed city property without prior city council approval," he wrote.

In answer to concerns about inadequate environmental review of the potties' impacts on coastal and scenic resources, the city responded that the California Environmental Quality Act and the California Administrative Code provide exemptions for self-contained toilets.

While the suit alleges the installation violates General Plan policies ensuring development doesn't "diminish the village character" and requiring reconnaissance work in archaeologically sensitive areas, principal planner Brian Roseth said the toilets are OK because they are "portable, self-contained, temporary and not located on the beach," and required no excavation.

"Moreover, the site was fully disturbed when the beach seawall was constructed several years earlier," Roseth said in

Town invited to first annual July 4 party

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE CITY of Carmel is launching an event that organizers hope will become an annual tradition — a free July 4 barbecue and picnic from 1 to 4 p.m. at Devendorf Park.

The "Celebrate America" event — featuring entertainment, food, and such old-fashioned games as sack races, a bubble-gum blowing contest and a pie-eating contest — was developed in response to a guest column Mayor Sue McCloud wrote in The Pine Cone asking for ideas for a July 4 celebration.

"We had a great response to that," said Christie Miller, the director of Carmel Community Activities and Recreation. "People said, 'Yes, please, let's do something.'"

Miller and the recreation commission enlisted the help of numerous local groups, including the Carmel Host Lions, Carmel Kiwanis, Yes for Carmel!, Carmel Heritage, The Celtic Society of the Monterey Peninsula and the Carmel Youth Center, to sponsor the event.

"It's really designed for big kids and little kids," said McCloud. "We're trying to make Carmel more of a community with events that pull people together."

McCloud and Miller were both enthused that the family picnic and barbecue will happen at no cost to the

City wants Sidney Reade as acting fire chief for another year

By TAMARA GRIPPI

WITH THE future of the Carmel Fire Department still in question, city administrator Rich Guillen is recommending that the city sign on interim fire chief Sidney Reade for one more year.

At the city council's upcoming meeting July 2, members will decide whether to extend the city's $6,200-a-month contract with Carmel Valley Fire Protection District for Reade's services for another year. (Reade first came on board as the interim fire chief in April 2001.)

Meanwhile, Guillen has appointed a "public safety team" — including Reade, police chief George Rawson, a structural engineer, an architect, members of the fire fighters association and Guillen — to study the best way to improve earthquake safety at the firehouse.

Guillen said the team will recommend whether to keep the historic fire station on Sixth Avenue or find a new location.

Then the city needs to decide how it wants the fire department to be managed. Since former chief Bill Hill retired more than a year ago, Guillen and city council members have discussed various options for running the station, including:

- creating a hybrid department managed by an outside agency and staffed by Carmel employees;

- complete consolidation with another agency; or
- keeping the city's stand-alone fire department intact.

Guillen emphasized that representatives from the firefighters association will have a place at the table when the final decision is made.

"Basically we're really going into this with an open mind," Guillen said. "We want to improve the service but if we can't improve it by using the two alternatives, then we'll stay the way we are because I do believe we have an excellent fire department."

Guillen said the agreement with Carmel Valley Fire Protection District will be extended until June 30, 2003, though he hopes the future of Carmel's fire department will be resolved before then.

"The fire fighters are doing an excellent job out there and Chief Reade has been responsive to any demands the council or I have had," Guillen said. "More or less everybody is working together and taking a wait-and-see approach to the issue."

Reade first came to the Mid Carmel Valley Fire Department as a volunteer in 1976 and worked her way up through the ranks to chief, and helped form the Carmel Regional Fire and Ambulance service that covers Carmel and Carmel Valley.

Reade was also instrumental in consolidating the Mid Valley fire department and Carmel Valley Fire Department into one agency two years ago.

TOWN WILL GET CHANCE TO JUDGE PARKING KIOSKS

By TAMARA GRIPPI

A PLAN is in the works to bring the long-anticipated paid parking demonstration to Carmel this summer. This week, Carmel City Administrator Rich Guillen and his staff met with a representative of Schlumberger, the New York company specializing in pay stations, to bring equipment to Carmel for a week-long demo.

The "pay and display" parking system — which has already been studied by a city committee — would require the installation of one or two parking kiosks per block. Downtown drivers would then buy the time they need to park and put the parking receipt on their windshield.

Earlier this month, the city council decided that paid parking — with net revenue projected to be $800,000 to $1.2 million annually — should be one of three new money-makers for the town.

Guillen said he's still ironing out the details of the parking demonstration with Schlumberger representative Wade Bettisworth. Guillen and Bettisworth toured downtown Carmel with city staff this week looking for the best sites for the demonstration.

"There are still some logistical problems we need to work out," Guillen said. "We need to see how to anchor the equipment, even for a temporary arrangement."

The city will likely want to display the parking stations on a couple of prominent downtown city blocks so locals will be able to get a feel for how the system will fit.

Guillen explained that the parking kiosks — which will be in place for three to five days — are intended to be a demonstration only and not an actual trial. Nobody will have to put money in the machines during the demonstration.

If all goes according to plan, Schlumberger will set up the demo kiosks — at no cost to the city — by late July or early August.

A new pay-and-display system would eliminate the 90-minute parking limits currently in place. Instead people would have the ability to choose how much time they need to park and buy that time at the kiosks, which are designed to accept cash as well as debit and credit cards.

With a paid parking system in place designed for tourists and shoppers, the city would likely designate areas on the periphery of downtown for employees and business owners to park.

While the convenience and the big boost in revenue are obvious benefits of such a paid parking system, it remains to be seen whether a town that tried so hard to keep mail boxes off city streets will accept one or two parking stations per block.

Guillen said the city committee that studied various paid parking options liked the pay-and-display system used in eight other American cities including Aspen, Colorado and Portland, Oregon because it was not as obtrusive as parking meters.

The idea for a paid parking system has been kicked around by the city council for several years.

The demonstration — recommended by a city parking committee — was put off for the last two years while the city completed its Local Coastal Program.

Now, while facing declining revenues, the council is eager to find out once and for all whether Schlumberger's parking product will work for Carmel.

Missing something?

A GUEST at an Ocean Avenue hotel had a rude awakening June 24, when she was advised by police that her 2002 Nissan Maxima SE no longer had any wheels. Someone stole them during the night and left the car propped up on milk crates — a peculiar site that prompted an early morning jogger to call the Carmel Police Department, according to CPD Detective Sgt. Terry Chandler. Because the car sported aluminum alloy wheels, the loss was pegged at $1,000, which would result in a grand theft charge if the thief is found.

Truck driver will pay for tree damage — if he can be found

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A LARGE white laundry truck tore the limb off an Acacia, sheered the bark off a towering Monterey pine, split a coast live oak in half and knocked down another limb on its way up a narrow residential Carmel street June 26, according to a witness.

Former Carmel Forest and Beach Commissioner Clayton Anderson, president of the Friends of the Forest and a Fourth Avenue resident, said he saw the truck pass by his house, heard the trees-versus-truck ruckus and yelled at the driver to stop, but the man kept right on trucking.

"I saw the size of that truck and knew there was going to be trouble," Anderson said. "I yelled at him, but it didn't do much good."

The driver reportedly looked angry.

Anderson alerted the Carmel Police Department and called city forester Mike Branson, who quickly responded to survey the damage.

Of the four trees — all of which were on city property along both sides of Fourth — Branson said the oak suffered the most. He doubted any of the trees would die, and crews began clearing the roadway soon after Carmel Police Officer Larry Bagley arrived.

at the scene.

If the city can track down the driver, he will be forced to pay for the damage he caused to the trees, according to the forester.

"We'll take a report, do the cleanup and do an estimate of the damage, identify the guy and send him a bill," Branson said. "Unless the tree dies, he will have to make restitution for our time and the cleanup."

If any of the trees die, the forester will calculate the replacement value and the perp will get a bill for that as well.

He could even face criminal charges. Although no other car or person was involved, an accident causing damage to anyone else's property — even city-owned trees — must be reported to the police or the owner immediately.

After restaurant owner Ed Johnson ran into a city-owned pine on San Carlos Street in January 2000 and left the scene, police found him by following the eight-tenths-of-a-mile-long skid mark his smashed Lexus left from the tree to his home. They asked the district attorney's office to file charges against him. The D.A. declined.

Anderson said police are asking for assistance in locating the driver of the laundry truck, which had the word "Crescent" on its side.

Comerica Bank robber drops I.D. at scene

By MARY BROWNFIELD

IT COULD be called a detective's dream case. A robber managed to walk out of Comerica Bank in Carmel with an unspecified amount of cash late last week — but left his drivers license behind. Police are now searching for 43-year-old Michael Bryan Leonard, the Arizona man they suspect of hitting the bank just before 3 p.m. June 21.

"It doesn't happen like this too often," commented Carmel Police Detective Sgt. Terry Chandler.

He described the suspect as 6 foot 2, 260 to 275 pounds, with green eyes and brown hair pulled back in a ponytail, wearing black rimmed oval glasses and all black clothing. A teller had seen the suspect lurking near the bank June 20 and reported him to police, but officers were unable to locate him. The same man was spotted again shortly before the robbery the following day, but no one contacted police, Chandler said.

"He came to the first teller window and produced a note demanding money, no dye and no alarm," he said. The suspect read aloud the demand he had written on binder paper but did not show a weapon or imply any threat.

The suspect also pointed at a nearby teller and ordered her not to trip the alarm. "You can see it on the film," Chandler said. The alarm was activated nonetheless.

"She passed him money and he stuffed it into his pack, and then he turned and walked away," Chandler said. "And unbeknownst to him, he dropped his drivers license."

After the suspect left, "the manager ran after him and started yelling, 'He robbed the bank!' and the guy took off running."

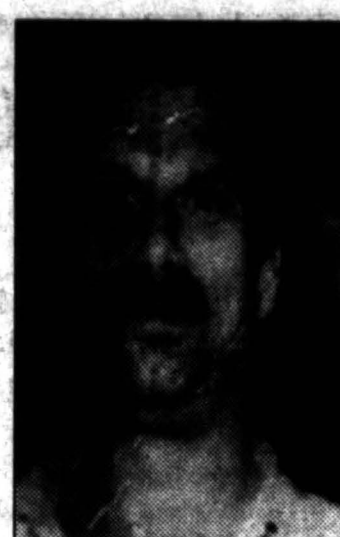

Bank employees said the photo on Leonard's I.D. matched the robber, according to Chandler. "We're hoping this isn't a fictitious Arizona drivers license," he said.

Police traced Leonard's last known address to Glendale, Ariz., as of March, but Seaside police also have records of him living in their city. They believe they recently saw him driving a white or light blue Chrysler LeBaron.

Chandler said he has contacted law enforcement agencies in Arizona and has sent the bank's video tape to the FBI.

Leonard is wanted in Phoenix on outstanding misdemeanor warrants for shoplifting and providing false information, according to Chandler, and has prior arrests in Texas and Louisiana for marijuana violations.

"He doesn't really have a big rap sheet for something like this," he said.

The drivers license dropped by the suspect in the June 21 Comerica Bank robbery provided this photo.

Quality Water is Our Only Business

Making sure that you always have a reliable supply of quality water is our only business.

Each year we test hundreds of samples to make sure the water we deliver to your family meets or exceeds strict State, Federal and Company standards.

And we take the extra step of mailing this report directly to you. We want to give you the best opportunity to access information that could be vital to your health.

It's one more way Cal-Am works to make sure you and your family are getting the highest quality drinking water possible.

You Can Help Protect Your Water Supply

From your home, water may eventually flow into rivers or return to the groundwater supply.

Dumping or washing paint, oil, or other pollutants into the street, down your home drain, or toilet is harmful to the environment and in many cases is against the law.

Carmel Valley Village parents want safer neighborhoods

By MARY BROWNFIELD

NO MORE incidents of suspicious men approaching children in Carmel Valley Village have been reported since three episodes were phoned in to the Monterey County Sheriff's Department earlier this month, but Tularcitos Elementary School parents are working together to get safety measures in place, according to one boy's mother.

Following the alleged incidents near Tularcitos and the Little League park on Paso Hondo Road, parents gathered to last week to discuss child safety with officials from the Monterey County Sheriff's Department, the California Highway Patrol and other county offices.

They decided to establish a Neighborhood Watch program, designate "safe homes" for children to flee to if they feel threatened, and organize crossing guards during the school year.

More than 100 people attended the meeting, during which parents received safety tips from Commander Jim Cronin and crime prevention specialist Dave Crozier, both with the sheriff's department. They also distributed fingerprint kits and answered parents' questions.

"We want the information out there," the parent said. "We want our children safe."

Now that school is out for the summer, parents are making sure their kids get wherever they are going without any trouble.

"We're kind of working together as parents to drive our children places, riding our bikes or walking with them, versus letting them walk alone," she said. "We're pulling together as a community."

Unexpected costs boost climbing lane bill; Caltrans and county team up again

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE HIGHWAY 1 climbing lane project was a little more expensive than the county originally counted on, according to deputy public works director Nick Nichols. The Monterey County Board of Supervisors voted without discussion June 25 to increase contingency funds by $453,270 to cover the costs.

The jump amounts to almost 10 percent of the original $4,685,000 estimate, according to Nichols.

"With the time constraints, environmental constraints and traffic issues, I feel like we have a very, very successful project," he said.

'With the time constraints, environmental constraints and traffic issues, I feel like we have a very, very successful project.'

Only finishing touches remain on the highway widening, which included a second northbound lane between Carmel Valley Road and Morse Drive, 4-foot-wide shoulders, retaining walls and a traffic barrier. Much of the roadwork was done around the clock.

The climbing lane has substantially reduced gridlock on what had been the most congested roadway in the state highway system.

Nichols said the additional costs stemmed from redesigning the retaining wall to bridge tree roots, compensating the contractor for delays caused by the changes to the retaining wall, cutting and replacing the casing on a PG&E gas line, planting more trees and modifying drainage systems.

ifying drainage systems.

The largest cost — about $300,000 — will pay for faux rock finish on the barrier along the west side of the highway.

Caltrans' promise of $3,750,000 in state highway funds is covering most of the $4,972,432 project. The Transportation Agency for Monterey County allocated $500,000, and the rest will come from developer fees and grants, according to Nichols. No county road funds or general funds were used.

County-Caltrans teamwork

The Highway 1 widening project — carried out by the county but on a state highway — was deemed such a success that Monterey County has teamed up with Caltrans to make several improvements along the Highway 68 corridor as well.

Upgrading traffic signals to allow emergency vehicles to change the lights when they need to get through should be completed within the next few months, according to Nichols.

Double left-turn lanes from Los Laureles Grade onto westbound Highway 68, as well as similar changes at the Corral de Tierra intersection, are on tap for next summer, he said.

Dual left-turn lanes from San Benancio Canyon Road onto westbound 68 and dual right-turn lanes eastbound from the Los Laureles Grade are also on the table, but have yet to receive funding.

While Caltrans and developers will foot the bill, the county is handling the engineering, obtaining the permits and hiring the contractor for the safety improvements which will ultimately help free up crowded intersections, Nichols said.

FISHERMEN LAUDED FOR CARMEL RIVER STEELHEAD RESCUE EFFORTS

By MARY BROWNFIELD

TWO FISHERMEN helping to restore Carmel River's steelhead population can now count themselves members of a national elite. Geoff Malloway and Clive Sanders were among 15 people in the United States to receive the annual National Oceanic Atmospheric Administration Environmental Hero Award last month.

Malloway and Sanders have helped save more than 40,000 steelhead since 1997, when they began transporting the fish from shallow tributaries into deeper waters so they could survive the dry months, according to Jonathan Berkey of the Carmel River Watershed Council.

Both recipients also represent recreational river users on the council and are active in the Carmel River Steelhead Association.

The annual award, created to recognize volunteers for their efforts in preserving marine resources, is bestowed upon nominees who also serve as examples to future stewards.

"It's not a feel-good award. [The winners] have to make a difference," said Patrick Rutten, National Marine Fisheries Service field supervisor for Central California. "Clive and Geoff have a sincere interest in the resource, have made a commitment and are dedicated to making a difference."

The fishermen represent "the kind of partnership we have to establish" to make the Carmel River habitat and Carmel Valley viable through collaboration among different interests, according to Rutten.

"The status of the steelhead in Carmel River has been perilous for the last 25 years," Rutten said, adding that their numbers would continue to suffer without the men's efforts to keep the steelhead run alive by conducting the rescues.

Malloway, who holds a degree in fisheries and wildlife management from Cal Poly and owns Central Coast Fly Fishing in Carmel Valley, believes "hero" better describes someone who saves a person from a burning building and said he and Sanders are only doing what responsible users should.

"Number one, I am an angler so I like to go out and catch them, and secondly, I'm a business owner," he said. "I take from the resource in that regard, so this is one way of putting my money where my mouth is."

McCloud offers free banners to displaced performers

By TAMARA GRIPPI

CARMEL MAYOR Sue McCloud wants the city to help the Carmel Bach Festival and the other performing arts groups displaced by the renovation of Sunset Center. Last week, she proposed that the city waive permit fees and pick up the tab for putting up banners on Ocean Avenue.

"I just think it's a gesture we can and should make at this time to help the users of Sunset theater get through this difficult time when the their budgets are strained and their routine is upset," McCloud said.

The cost to install the Ocean Avenue banners for each group ranges from less than $100 for the California Performing Arts Festival to $900 for the Carmel Bach Festival. Of those amounts, $50 is a city permit fee.

McCloud argued that waiving the fees for the year would be of little cost to the city and would provide some relief to the performance groups struggling during the closing of their venue.

The tab for setting up the banners for the year would cost the city less than $3,000.

Willem Wijnbergen, executive director of the Bach Festival, said he was delighted with McCloud's initiative.

"This year in particular is very, very tough for this organization with the economy going the way it is and with 9/11," Wijnbergen said. "Every little bit helps."

The performing arts groups which found themselves homeless during Sunset's renovation have had to become creative to keep their performances going strong.

The Bach Festival, which has had a home for 63 years at Sunset Center, staged its biggest concerts last year at the Naval Postgraduate School in Monterey but had to come up with a new plan when that venue became unavailable due to heightened security after the terrorist attacks.

The Bach Festival will stage its main concerts at the Performing Arts Center at Santa Catalina School and has also scheduled additional performances at Asilomar Conference Center in Pacific Grove.

"Of course we want people in Carmel — both residents and visitors — to know we're here," Wijnbergen said. "I hope that if the council accepts it we'll be able to have those banners there. Otherwise we simply wouldn't."

'This year in particular is very, very tough for this organization.'

Church to honor military

IN HONOR of our nation's birthday, St. Dunstan's Episcopal Church in Carmel Valley will recognize past and present members of the military during special patriotic services at 8 a.m. and 10 a.m. June 30.

The tradition began last year, when pastor Jeff Kraemer encouraged those in the Armed Forces to don their uniforms for a July 4-themed church gathering. Parishioner George Eckardt said both services will emphasize the military.

"Particularly now, this is a topical subject," he said, adding that people representing all four branches of the military participated last year. St. Dunstan's is located on Robinson Canyon Road.

PRESIDENTS MESSAGE

by Demi Briscoe

I wanted to take this opportunity to thank the Board of Directors of the Carmel Business Association for the many projects on which they are currently working. They make the organization run more effectively for our members. The following Directors are working on your behalf:

Tammi Tharp - This super woman is in charge of "Event Marketing" for CBA. She is currently working on several major efforts. The first is the coordination of a bus full of shoppers' round trip from Fresno on July 9th. The second will be the next scheduled arrival of the cruise line in September. Tammi is also planning a fabulous series of holiday events for visitors to the area, as well as next season's AT&T shuttle service.

Mia McKee and Tom Williams, the Dynamic Duo, are working on this year's Taste of Carmel, which will be bigger and better (if such a thing is possible) than in years past. The date is October 20th, so mark your calendars now and plan to enjoy a "Fantasy on the Orient Express - Not Your Usual Choo Choo!"

Catherine Bartels is working her magic putting together mixers and ribbon cuttings for new businesses in the area. Watch your e-mail for announcements and clip the "Calendar of Events" for your desk reference. Catherine has really put together some wonderful opportunities for us all to gather together and swap stories.

Albert Steele, Chef of the Hour, not only cooks and donates delicacies for our mixers but also volunteers at our Kiosk telling visitors of the many virtues of our beautiful village. Carroll Fegusson is always on hand to give us the pulse of Carmel from her vantage as a retailer with Adam Fox on Ocean Avenue. She also helps coordinate our events.

Al Zarzana is working on an exciting new web-site presentation with our newly named marketing experts, Graham & Associates. You will be impressed and dazzled.

Lesley Miller is working on the Green Ribbon of Excellence dinner at which we annually honor the outstanding businesses in Carmel. She has redesigned the entire event and voting procedures. It is going to be a marvelous year-end extravaganza to celebrate excellence in Carmel business, and will be held on Wednesday, December 4, 2002. If you have ideas or input please call Lesley.

Larry Hoover is the brain behind most of what goes on at CBA. He is involved in everything and is a major force behind the "B to B" activities of your association. Talk about a boy wonder!! We thank him for his continued dedication and high achievement for the business community in Carmel.

Barbara Gianotti acts as our liaison with the Carmel Pine Cone and coordinates advertisements in that publication. Nancy Holden has been extremely instrumental in heading up our search for a new marketing and public relations effort, and helps businesses put together co-op advertising opportunities.

If you have ideas to incorporate on any of the above committees please call those mentioned and volunteer your suggestions and your time. Many heartfelt thanks to the Board of Directors.

Generous Members ~ Thanks to Lucy Willman of The Crossroads Shopping Village for a great June mixer! King of the green shoots 16 below his age

By MARY BROWNFIELD

GOLF COURSE lore surrounds retired Lt. General Bill Ely, father of Carmel City Councilman Dick Ely and a man who, at age 90, has an uncanny knack for hitting multiple milestones in the game of golf. His admirers are so devoted, they've talked themselves into exaggerating his accomplishments.

"He's shot his age or below 3,700 times," piped one golfer.

The real number is closer to 1,500, according to the man himself. "It gets a little easier every year," he laughed.

"He's made 16 or 17 holes-in-one," said another fan.

Actually, Ely's number of holes-in-one rests at nine — so many that he can't recall the details of them all.

"We're talking about something that happened over 50 years, all in different places and under different circumstances," he said.

He sunk his first ace at the Army Navy Country Club in Washington, D.C., while more followed at other courses in D.C., Florida, Hawaii and at Bayonet Golf Course in Seaside, where he plays with a group of military retirees called The Bandits. He's played with the group for 50 years — much of that time as a part-time Monterey Peninsula resident. Ely now lives in Florida but is still a frequent visitor to Carmel.

He recently shot a 74 — an unprecedented

ed 16 strokes below his age — at Florida's Quail Ridge Country Club, the course on which he and wife Helen share a fairway-side villa.

"It's some kind of record," he said of his score. "But nobody keeps records like that." The Guinness Book of World Records tracks other golf-related achievements, such as fastest round played, lowest score and most balls hit in an hour, but has no entry for number of strokes below a person's age.

With those numbers, the exaggeration by his admirers is hardly necessary.

Ely's golfing adventure began 70 years ago, when a friend encouraged him to take up the game while at West Point in 1932.

"I had never swung a club, but I loved it from the beginning and have been playing it ever since," he said.

During his 33-year Army career, which included service in the South Pacific under General Douglas MacArthur and assignments in Australia and Japan, Ely remained a member of the Army Navy Country Club, the biggest golf club in the world with more than 50,000 members.

He won the club championship four times: as a colonel, a brigadier general, a major general and a three-star lieutenant general.

After retiring from the military in 1966, Ely and his wife bought the farm — literally — when they purchased his family's ranch near Pittsburgh, Penn. Not interested in ranching, the Elys decided to turn the place into a golf course, which they ran until selling it in 1984.

"I had to build two dams to have enough water for the course, so we named it Double Dam," he said. "It was publicized in the Wall Street Journal as one of the worst-named golf courses in the country."

Disgruntled golfers would often utilize the alternate spelling of "dam," Ely said, and the people who purchased the course renamed it Dogwood Hills.

In the genes?

"My dad is 90 years old and he's one of the most unbelievable golfers in the country," Dick Ely said.

The councilman's no slouch, either, and has been playing ever since he was young, though not necessarily because he was motivated by his dad.

"Dad was so good when I was growing up that we would go out on the golf course and it was really intimidating," he said. "When I was about 10, he brought me to Pebble Beach and the only thing I remember about that was trying to throw rocks at the seals."

After graduating from Duke University, the younger Ely began honing his game while in the military and discovered it came in quite handy.

"When I was stationed in Hawaii, I had to meet with very high-ranking officials from Asian countries and we would go out on the golf course," he said. "You could talk about life and business, make deals and negotiate treaties, and you learned not only about the individuals but what kind of men or women they were by their commitment to the game and their honesty. I have always loved that about the game of golf."

And over the years, his father has always helped him tweak his swing.

"He always knew my strengths and weaknesses," Dick Ely said. "He was my swing coach, so when my game would start to fall apart, I could schedule a vacation and go talk to him."

The councilman said his game has really come together in recent months, a trend he hopes will continue. He won a Northern California Golf Association regional qualifier in a senior division to make it to the final round at Poppy Hills — where he didn't do so well — and had the lowest qualifying round for the public links division. He will compete in the public links finals at Spyglass Hill July 9 and 10.

Last month, Dick Ely and playing partner Bernie Tashny won their round of two-man best ball and will progress to the next level of competition in August at Poppy Hills.

But a great golfing achievement came on the day in 1987 when he finally beat his dad on a course in Hawaii.

"He doesn't like to lose, even to his kids," he said. "It wasn't until he was in his late 70s that I was able to beat him. It was by one stroke and it was one of the greatest golf days of my life."

City weighs publishing official newsletter

By TAMARA GRIPPI

AFTER CARMEL'S recent move into local television — with the broadcast of every Carmel City Council meeting — the city has now set its sights on the newspaper business.

At its upcoming meeting July 2, the council will consider launching a quarterly city newsletter to be mailed out to all Carmelites.

Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud explained that the publication isn't intended to compete with the other daily and weekly newspapers on the Peninsula, but instead will be devoted to in-depth explanations of complex city issues.

"This would explain a complicated subject like the Local Coastal Program or the budget and put it in context — so it's not just a bite out of context," McCloud said. "It's another extension of our community policy of trying to open up government."

Each issue would tackle the complexities of one or two major Carmel issues instead of attempting to cover a wide range of stories.

McCloud noted that the newsletter would be meant to supplement the public outreach efforts already underway including the televised council meetings and Carmel's new website.

At the July 2 meeting, the council will take a look at some mock-ups of the city newsletter, which were designed by a volunteer, McCloud said.

Other Peninsula cities, including Monterey and Pacific Grove, already have newsletters — ranging from one-page, copy-machine-quality publications to more sophisticated glossy productions.

The city won't be hiring a staff of reporters but will probably rely on Carmel's resident grant writer to edit the newsletter, McCloud said.

The city is considering hiring Paige Johnson Design, a local business, to handle the printing and mailing of the newsletter — which would cost the city approximately $20,000 for the four issues each year.

BARRIER

the way Mother Nature meant for the breaching of the sandbar to happen," Potter said.

Homeowners, who saw their neighborhood flood during heavy rains in January 2001, were skeptical about the metal barrier at first, according to Camino Real resident Jack Reynolds, but became more supportive.

"The agencies are going to continue to put the screws to us as far as breaching with a bulldozer goes, so we need to find a way we can achieve a natural breaching 95 percent of the time," Reynolds said in summarizing the county's reasoning.

"I sensed there was the understanding we're going to have something done there, and maybe this is the way to go," Potter said after a public meeting where the barrier plan was presented.

The idea also has support from the handful of regulatory agencies that have a stake in the lagoon, according to Potter, who would like to see the work done before next winter.

Although the county has cut a channel through the sandbar at the edge of the lagoon for decades, the process has grown into a big environmental controversy because of its potential effects on young Carmel River steelhead, a threatened species. Breaching now requires permits from the Army Corps of Engineers, the California Coastal Commission, the National Marine Fisheries Service, the California Department of Fish and Game, state parks and several county agencies.

Pleasing to all?

Ever since NMFS delayed the lagoon breaching last year, causing several nearby homes to flood, the county has been trying to identify a solution to please all involved.

"We were spending money on a study to determine what we're going to do, and we kept running into conflicts with NMFS," Potter said. "This proposal will protect the fish, eliminate the county's having to run out there on an emergency basis, and will give the homeowners permanent flood protection."

Reynolds said many residents have questioned the hoopla over the opening of the sandbar.

"Most people feel it won't make a difference to the fish whether they go into the ocean this hour, the next hour or the next day," he said. "But nonetheless we have to go along with the regulators."

Residents want samples

Some homeowners have decried the barrier's possible impact on their views, according to Reynolds. Many asked that samples and staking be set up in the area to give them an idea of how it might look — a wish with which the county intends to comply, according to Potter.

Potter hopes that, while the berm may visible, residents will realize "the benefit to their properties will be so significant that they'll be in support of it."

The idea of an earthen berm arose years ago but was dismissed because such a berm would have to be 40 to 60 feet wide — "a blister on the landscape," Potter called it — and would be inviting to hikers.

But corrugated sheet metal, just three-fourths of an inch thick, would be much less obtrusive, especially once it has rusted and native vegetation has grown around it, Potter said.

Although the metal barrier project must get permits from numerous agencies and has yet to be designed or funded, Potter is optimistic it could all happen before storms hit this winter.

"When they're for public safety and the environment, projects can usually get approved in a reasonable amount of time," he said.

According to Freeman, Raynor's argument also has no merit because the new potties only replace facilities that stood in a redwood shed at Scenic and Santa Lucia until teenage vandals allegedly burned them down last November. They were installed without permit in 1995 but were retroactively approved two years later — a decision far too old to be contested now, the city says.

"To throw out these decisions today because the restrooms were destroyed by arson is wrong and without legal or equitable foundation," Freeman wrote.

Although Raynor's lawsuit asked the court to slap an injunction on the city to remove the temporary toilets until they can be subjected to public hearings and environmental review, the city said it never received a summons for that part of the lawsuit and would therefore did not respond to it.

And since the coastal commission's Coastal Development Permit waiver was the only aspect of the project that involved an official government action, Freeman said Raynor should sue the coastal commission, not the city.

"In closing, we urge this court to weigh the respective issues and interests, public and private, which have been argued: Petitioner objects to the sight and smell of the temporary restrooms. Carmel has a duty to protect public health, welfare and safety which it believes includes providing public restrooms for all who come to enjoy Carmel Beach. We recognize that some residents dislike the temporary restrooms; on the other hand, many residents and visitors favor the restrooms and the city believes the restrooms facilitate public use of Carmel Beach as strongly favored by the Coastal Act. Mere unhappiness with the outcome of a legitimate governmental decision or program is not grounds for relief."

No court hearing has been scheduled.

residents or the city. The food — including hot dogs, cold drinks, apples, ice cream, shortbread, watermelon and popcorn — has all been donated by the Carmel groups sponsoring the event.

"Everybody was more than willing to come out and put this together in a relatively short period of time," Miller said. "We hope as people find out about it we'll be able to add events and make it a bigger event as the years go on."

The Patriotic Celebration will begin at 1 p.m. with an introduction by McCloud, a color guard ceremony by the American Legion, a surprise historical reading by Stephen Moorer and entertainment by the Sound Bytes, an upbeat rock n' roll band. Games, eating and festivities will continue until 4 p.m.

Parade and fireworks

Folks who are looking for a July 4 parade need only go as far as Monterey for the annual flag raising ceremony and parade down Alvarado Street at 10 a.m. Monterey is also hosting a July 4 barbecue from 11 a.m.

to 5 p.m. on the grounds of Monterey City Hall on Pacific Street.

Monterey's fireworks show — fog or not — will begin at 9:15 p.m. from a barge adjacent to Wharf #2. The 20 minute pyrotechnic display will be synchronized with music on KWAV 96.9 FM.

Del Monte Avenue will be closed beginning at 3 p.m. on the Fourth to allow emergency vehicle access, so fireworks enthusiasts are encouraged to park at Monterey Peninsula College or Del Monte Center and walk to the Monterey beach to watch the show.

The Defense Language Institute — long a favorite spot to watch the Monterey fireworks — will not be open this year because of heightened security following last year's terrorist attacks on New York and Washington. The Naval Postgraduate School has also canceled its usual July 4 observances.

And locals who want to put on their own fireworks show will have to avoid Carmel-by-the-Sea, Pacific Grove, Monterey and all unincorporated areas of the county including Carmel Valley, Big Sur and Pebble Beach.

The "safe and sane" variety of fireworks — including smoke bombs, snakes and sparklers — are permitted only in the cities of Marina and Seaside.

VitWatch gives winemakers real time remote access to vineyard

SOUTH COUNTY'S Scheid Vineyards has launched an industry first: VitWatch, a state-of-the-art information system that provides Scheid's winery customers with real-time web access to the grapes they have contracted.

Scheid Vineyards has been farming wine grapes in Monterey County since 1972 and operates approximately 6,000 acres of premium wine grape vineyards. It services an array of winery clients along the coast of California with 13 distinct vineyard properties, which extend from Soledad southward to Hames Valley.

Typically, a winery client will contract with Scheid for a specified area of vineyard acreage, called a vineyard "block." This block (or blocks) is then custom-farmed by Scheid to meet the particular winemaking goals of the client.

"Our goal is to be able to call specific clients and let them know when important events are taking place on their contracted blocks, such as shoot thinning," said Scott Scheid, Scheid Vineyards president and chief executive officer. "They can then log on to VitWatch to observe such activities being performed in real-time. Seeing how the shoots are thinned and positioned is a quality issue and is extremely important to winemakers. It's difficult for them to be hundreds of miles from their grapes. With VitWatch and the VitCam, it is truly the next best thing to actually being there."

"Farming is becoming increasingly sophisticated and VitWatch is an innovative way of applying technology to make better decisions in the vineyard. It represents a significant investment of intellectual capital from Scheid Vineyards," adds Scheid, who, along with members of his team, spent several years developing the program.

"Growers have traditionally taken the role of trying to keep the winemaker out of the vineyard. We're taking the opposite approach and actually encouraging our clients to know everything that is going on in their blocks of fruit, warts and all," commented Kurt Gollnick, senior vice president and chief operating officer of Scheid.

Gollnick added, "There is great competition among winemakers to create ever better and more interesting wine that will win the hearts and palates of consumers. VitWatch is an extension of our hands-on approach and allows winemakers access to vineyard information 24 hours a day, so they can have a greater say in the farming practices being employed on their fruit."

"The potential for an information-providing tool such as VitWatch is enormous," continued Tony Stephen, director of wine grape marketing and sales for Scheid. "We believe it is an excellent tool to bring our vineyard team and winery client together to realize the common goal of producing outstanding wines. Several wineries have asked us if we can create a VitWatch for their winery-owned vineyards."

So will VitWatch be expanded to a market beyond winery clients with which Scheid does business? "Right now, our focus is on servicing the winery clients of Scheid Vineyards," said Scheid. "We are continually working on enhancements to VitWatch, much of it based on feedback we receive from our clients, to make VitWatch more useful and powerful. There may come a point in time when we offer VitWatch to a larger audience, but for now, it is proprietary and for the use of our clients only."

Salinas-based Scheid Vineyards sells most of its grape production under short and long-term contracts to wineries producing high quality table wines, and the company also produces a small amount of ultra premium wine under its own label.

'Growers have traditionally taken the role of trying to keep the winemaker out of the vineyard. We're taking the opposite approach and actually encouraging our clients to know everything that is going on in their blocks of fruit, warts and all.'

Affordable Arborist Tree Care

Garry Tarnowski, Certified Arborist WC5324

Staff Certified Arborist WC569 • 4 Generations In The Tree Care Industry

Trees in an urban setting depend on our help. Other than natural calamities, the most likely cause of tree damage is human negligence. Inadequate care makes trees susceptible to disease and lacking strength to survive severe weather conditions. By giving a little care and following correct tree practice, homeowners can ensure that their trees are protected and ready to face nature's fury.

Other considerations overlooked are the insulating qualities of the shade they produce, air purification, soil stabilization against erosion and ground water trapping. A dying or dead tree can cause considerable damage and present a threat to life in the event of a storm. Most property insurance policies consider dead trees falling as a negligence and will not provide coverage. Fortunately, there is a company dedicated to the care of our trees. Other than providing shade and offering aesthetic qualities, healthy trees can increase the value of your property, reduce heating and cooling bills, act as windbreaks and create a relaxing atmosphere. The consulting Certified Arborists of Affordable Arborist Tree Care know proper planting techniques and the best time of the year for various tree operations such as fertilization, disease control, planting, feeding and trimming.

Affordable Arborist Tree Care is fully equipped for any size job, using a 150-foot truck crane and multiple man lifts, whole tree chippers and stump grinders. This is why Monterey County Public Works and the City of Carmel and other municipalities call Affordable Arborist Tree Care for hazardous tree removals. Contact Affordable Arborist Tree Care at (831) 375-7900 for diagnosis and solving of any tree problems. An ounce of prevention can save a pound of money. California State Tree Contractors License No. 718682.

THIS WEEK'S bit of observation may not be of interest to people who wine connoisseurs.

Pine Needles

By Sissi Maleki

But for the rest of us people who simply stick to "what tastes good" in our selection of wine, reading some of the imaginative prose used for wine descriptions is like fantasizing about an LSD trip. ... amazingly rich and seductive, a towering wine with layers and layers of rich blackberry, plum, cherry and sweet spice flavors that cascade across a dense structure, polished to a fine-then-well so the flavors ring, unopposed by tannins; the tannins are present, but totally submerged in the flavors. The kind of wine you want to roll around in. ... Clearly, this drinker was in a different state of being than the typical imbiber. On second thought, is there a ticket I can buy to feel like this — legally?

world's most respected interior designers. If ever there was an event where every moment was more than worth the ticket price, this was it. With slides of both personal work and historical interiors, Saladino gave guests a fascinating and useful lesson on how to flawlessly integrate classicism with contemporary living, and in so doing, "overcome the reality of what you're actually given." This even included combining "a $1.19 basket with a rare Roman column pedestal." Interspersed in the lecture were humorous notes — "Clients come to me with what I call 'the box of repressed dreams' and they tell me, 'I want the whole enchilada!'" Saladino even had a quote from Chanel: "She had said: 'What God has endowed you with, it's better bought.'" ... It was thanks to Valera Lyles that the Foundation was able to entice the designer into lecturing. Valera and Saladino had struck up a friendship years ago when both were on a decorative arts tour in Europe ... Valera's close friends Suzanna Allen and Catherine MacFee were there, too ... Bill & Lucy Reno got to know Saladino — who's from their hometown — Kansas City, Missouri. A mutual friend asked Bill — who could've been an architect in another life rather than a highway builder — to give the designer a tour of famed architect Frances Elkins' Casa Ameste ... Board member Mary May Altenburg helped spread the word of the event quite successfully, getting friends like Margaret Oliver, Renée Fuqua, Elma Brown and Bill & Vicki Mitchell to attend ... Lee von Hasseln just sold her longtime home in Pebble Beach and is moving into another one close by. Lee, who has the gifted touch for design, will have plenty to do with the new place ... Marcia Koford told Linda McCarthy and board member Tom Parks of the shock of returning from Boston to find her sprinkler system had inundated the home — which houses five pianos. "Until repairs are done, they'll stay shrink-wrapped!" ... Tom has been lining things up for the Aug. 9 presentation by National Book Award winner Jonathan Franzen ... Artie Early caught up with good friend and author Suzanne Von Drachenfels ... Pam Clancy and Dianne Bohlman, who had grown up next door to each other on Scenic, met up for the first time in 30 years. They had plenty to talk about ... Others present: Judy Harrold, designer Liz Lord, Judi Wallner and Lois Prentize.

■ Soroptimists keep giving

Soroptimist International of Carmel Bay held their annual grants and awards luncheon at Rancho Cañada, with many of the beneficiaries in attendance. Jacqueline Cruz was still flying high from receiving the Women's Opportunity Award so she could attend college, and so was Michael Lamont Younger, Jr., heading off to USC ... Women of Distinction Award winner Jean Hurd was moved to tears by some of the life stories from scholarship winners ... Kathleen Adamson of Gateway Center was honored with the Women Helping Women Award ... Total handed out on this day was a whopping $52,000 and committee head Judith Ann Raible felt great about it ... Witness PacRep's 'Molly Sweeney' before it's gone

By DEBORAH SHARP

"MOLLY SWEENEY," currently playing in repertory with "The Elephant Man" at PacRep, deserves as much attention as the probably better known play. It is a small masterpiece, beautifully cast and staged by Dan Gotch.

Strictly speaking, "Molly Sweeney" isn't a play, but a series of monologues spoken by just three characters: Molly, a middle-aged Irish woman blind since she was 10 months old; her husband Frank, a charming, loquacious Irishman out to save the world; and Mr. Rice, a former eye surgeon who has holed up in the small Irish town where Molly and Frank live to fish, drink and brood. The mix is seemingly fortuitous because Frank is committed to helping Molly see again, and Mr. Rice is anxious to regain his past success. Only Molly, on the eve of her surgery, senses that she is risking a great deal.

The play is divided into two acts. The first leads up to the surgery; the second deals with the results of it. On one level it is a case study of what happens to those rare few blind people (only 20 in a 1,000 years, according to Rice) who regain their sight. On a deeper level it touches on the difference between "seeing and understanding," the inability of most of us to understand what we see, particularly in our relations with others.

Ironically Molly is the one who both "sees" and understands. She reminisces about her domineering father whom she adored, but who, she understands, was "bewildered." She senses the same bewilderment in Rice, whom she also likes.

She loves Frank's passions, his enthusiasms. She explains he is everything her father wasn't. She agrees to the operation because she doesn't want to disappoint either man's dream which, she understands, really has little to do with herself. But she also has the wisdom to realize she may lose her "special knowledge" of people when she gains her sight.

Julie Hughett, as Molly, delivers most of her monologues seated, but the spirit, enthusiasm and love of life and people that animate Molly shine through Hughett. She captures the contradictions in Molly, her confidence and independent spirit, her desire to please, and her grave misgivings about the operation. All these disparate feelings burst forth in the wild hornpipe she dances, whirling around the stage, to throw off the desperation that closes in on her the night before her surgery. Hughett makes Molly real and very admirable to us.

Equally real and sympathetic, if misguided, is Frank, played by Michael D. Jacobs. Jacobs evokes the quintessential Irishman: a man chasing his dreams, enthusiastic, self-deprecating, but determined to carry on, even if he doesn't understand why. In his monologues as Frank, Jacobs makes

From Amphetamines to Zonked — The Hippie Dictionary covers it all

THE COVER of "The Hippie Dictionary" sports a yellow VW "Love Bus" painted with flowers and hip expressions.

The interior proffers an alphabetized cultural encyclopedia of the 1960s and 1970s. Many of the expressions are tired — they sound to us to be anything but mod in this day and age. What was groovy then is almost embarrassingly uncool now.

But the passage of time has a way of doing that. This is a great reference work for an era that produced a true counter culture — an anti-establishment movement with a credo of peace and love but that also embraced the triumvirate of sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll — sometimes to excess.

There are 525 pages of words and their definitions (some not for the prudish) followed by a section on civil rights, the Vietnam war, anti-war and pro-war groups, events and leaders, the Nixon administration and Watergate participants, free-speech, student rights and human rights, the women's liberation and the gay and lesbian movements, the rights of Native Americans and other minorities, ecology and environment, the computer revolution, the media — as it was of importance to the era, communes and religious communities, gurus and religious leaders, and presidents of the USA during the era.

The author, local photographer John Bassett McCleary, who lived through the era and participated in it, believes "the more sources of reference to past excesses and successes, the easier it will be for future generations to make choices based upon knowledge, rather than through painful experimentation."

McCleary believes that hippie era ideals were sound, and that the values of anti-materialism, environmentalism and non-violence continue to be both valuable and appealing to a broad range of Americans.

Lydia Pense and Cold Blood deliver at McFly's

LYDIA PENSE, one of the most dynamic and talented singers to emerge from San Francisco in the 1960s, performs this Saturday, June 29 at Sly McFly's on Cannery Row with several original members from her group, Cold Blood.

Plugged In

By Stephen L. Vagnini

With six albums released between 1969 and 1976, Lydia Pense and Cold Blood were West Coast sensations cranking out a string of hit singles including the classic "I Just Wanta Make Love to You." Appearing in Monterey this weekend, the latest edition of Cold Blood delivers an explosive contemporary sound that mixes rock 'n' roll with the distinctive blend of R&B and funk which originally caught the attention of legendary music promoter Bill Graham.

Still playing the hits that made them San Francisco '60s icons, Cold Blood has added some new original material to the repertoire. For reservations and information call 649-8050.

At the Jazz & Blues Company in Carmel this Friday, June 28, Brazilian jazz pianist Weber Iago performs in concert with acoustic pianist Charles Loos and vocalist Claudia Villela. Iago, a prolific pianist/composer who moved to the Monterey Peninsula in 1990, will perform on electric piano in an eclectic evening of Brazilian and European jazz.

Loos, a Belgian pianist, studied jazz composition and orchestration at the Berklee College of Music in Boston and later returned to Europe where he accompanied numerous soloists including Toots Thielemans, Chet Baker and Art Farmer. Like Iago, Loos is a serious student of music and was awarded the Django D'or in 1997, an award bestowed upon Belgium's best jazz musician.

Villela, a talented Brazilian born vocalist, today resides in Santa Cruz and has developed into a major vocal artist and composer. Music starts at 7:30 p.m.

French jazz and blues pianist Phillipe LeJeune returns to the Jazz & Blues Company this Saturday, June 29, for an evening of stride and bebop. Born in Toulouse, France, LeJeune is a regular visitor to the United States where he has recorded numerous CDs. His latest album, "Piano Groove,"

The local author has worked as a writer, art director and photographer in the newspaper, music, publishing and advertising industries for the last 37 years. Joan Jeffers McCleary, his wife, edited the book.

McCleary will sign "The Hippie Dictionary" from 1:30 to 4 p.m., Saturday, June 29 at The Thunderbird Bookshop, Carmel; from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. the same day at Tillie Gort's Cafe, Pacific Grove; and from 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday, July 6 at Morgan's Coffee & Tea, Monterey.

IT IS appropriate that we review J.T. Westfield's "Cut Throat" novel this week, as it, too, deals with the '60s revolution: The protagonists are three young people who have made it into the '70s and who more or less personify the word "hippie."

Westfield, a pen name for a local author, writes with such verisimilitude the reader can readily imagine being back in the 1970s with the protagonists, Thomas Kreig, Caitlin and Miller. Thomas and Miller are both in love with Caitlin, and Caitlin is in love with them. They form a sort of ménage à trois, but always being thoughtful of the others' sensibilities.

was recorded in San Francisco, a genuine blues and boogie record dedicated to the spirit of the legendary Memphis Slim.

Classically trained, LeJeune plays with the confidence of a musician who knows his chops. He will be joined by drummer Chas Mewhort and bassist Dan Robbins. Music starts at 7:30 p.m. Call 624-6431 for reservations.

The men smoke pot, practice yoga, listen to The Dead and throw Frisbees while Caitlin studies. Sometimes she joins them in a three-handed variation of pinocle called Cut Throat.

They go back and forth from Nogales, Ariz. to Mazatlan, Mexico, where they camp on the beach, hoping to score quantities of marijuana. What happens when they do makes up the last part of the story.

If you weren't into this scene in the '60s or '70s, you'll soon become aware of what life was like back then among the hippies, and after a while you might not wince at the language, which is all too liberally laced with the usual "s" and "f" words.

This is a time capsule of an era, and goes hand in hand with McCleary's dictionary.

"Cutthroat," published by Ozapp Publishing, Carmel, is a 237-page trade paperback that retails for $17.95. It is available at The Thunderbird Bookshop, Carmel, and City Lights Bookstore, in North Beach, San Francisco.

MICHAEL KENNA will be signing copies of his newly released monograph, "Easter Island," at a reception from 6 to 8 p.m., Friday, June 28 at the Center for Photographic Art, Sunset Cultural Center, Suite 1, San Carlos and Ninth, Carmel-by-the-Sea. The center has worked with Nazraeli Press to create a special edition of 500 copies with the center's name imprinted on it. The book will be offered at a greatly reduced rate. For information, call 625-5181.

As a sort of kick-off to the Fourth of July, artist Pam Carroll is launching her new children's book — this one is a counting book — "One Nation — America by the Numbers" ("To count to twenty I hope you're thinkin' of Honest Abe, Abraham Lincoln"). Devin Scillian of Michigan did the text and poetry, as he did with Carroll's companion book, "A is for America — An American Alphabet."

Pam will sign books from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. on Saturday, June 29 at The Thunderbird Bookshop, Carmel.

eye contact with the audience, drawing us into his schemes, willing us to follow him. But, for all that, it is Molly who walks tall and confidently to her operation. Frank walks beside her with head down against the wind, somehow small, as Mr. Rice describes them arriving at his office the morning of the surgery.

John Rousseau plays Rice, rounding out the cast with an equally fine performance. He is the foil to the other two: sophisticated, aloof, prone to brooding over the failures in his life. He is taken with Molly, and although her operation will be a simple removal of cataracts, something he can easily do, he is strangely afraid to operate. He ignores his vague misgivings in the hope that this operation will restore his own life to him. Like Hughett and Jacobs, Rousseau takes the contradictions in the character he plays and makes of them a whole, believable and sympathetic man.

Although there is sadness in Molly's story, the totality of the play is not sad because the characters are so finely drawn by the playwright and skillfully rendered by this cast that we are left, ultimately, with understanding and acceptance of the human spirit all three characters embody.

The costuming is simple and appropriate to the characters and their situations. The staging is also appropriately minimal. There are few props: just three stools for Molly and Frank and a raised area of the stage, a chair, table, bottle and glass for Rice. The lighting also is simple, but significant. While Molly and Frank deliver their monologues in high light, which touches the audience as well, Rice speaks from his slightly raised position with the rest of the stage dark and only his portion lit. This strategy allows Frank and Molly to connect directly with the audience while Rice maintains a separateness, an aloofness. And, most dramatically, at the end of the play Molly is left on the stage, alone, the light gradually receding from her until just her face, eyes upturned, remains before us.

Molly Sweeney plays in PacRep's Circle Theatre until July 14. See it.

Not so fast

THIS WEEK'S ruling by a U.S. Court of Appeals that the Pledge of Allegiance is unconstitutional was immediately dissected, analyzed and critiqued by reporters, commentators and pundits across the country.

There is no need for us to add to that discussion here — except to note that almost all of the initial reporting and analysis had the decision completely wrong.

"A Sacramento doctor brought the suit because he doesn't think his daughter should be required to say the Pledge of Allegiance," one San Francisco all-news radio station stated over and over again the day the decision was announced.

During one of the prestigious network television newscasts that evening, a correspondent agreed with this version of the judge's decision, reporting, "The court ruled that students cannot be forced to recite the pledge."

Later, a commentator on a cable channel railed against the man who brought the suit: "So the school district requires every student to say the Pledge of Allegiance ... why doesn't this man think his daughter should follow the rules?"

Unfortunately for all these media outlets — and the public which depends on them for accurate reporting — the statements were utterly incorrect.

Michael Newdow, an atheist, went to court challenging the constitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance because it contains the words, "under God." But he never claimed his daughter's school or her teacher required her to say it. The Supreme Court banned compulsory recitation of the pledge back in 1943.

"Rather, [Newdow] claims that his daughter is injured when she is compelled to watch and listen as her teacher leads her classmates in a ritual proclaiming that there is a God," Judge Alfred T. Goodwin wrote in his decision, which was published by the court on the Internet at the same moment it was released at the courthouse.

So this ruling was about protecting an 8-year-old girl from listening to the Pledge of Allegiance, not from having to recite it. State law required the Newdow girl go to school. And the school district required teachers to lead their classes in the pledge every morning. But it never forced any student to say it. The reporters and the commentators weren't paying attention.

So were they also wrong when they unanimously agreed that the decision would be overturned by the Supreme Court?

Even a cursory look at the court's decisions on religion in the classroom reveals that there is a good chance the High Court will uphold the appeals court ruling on the Pledge of Allegiance.

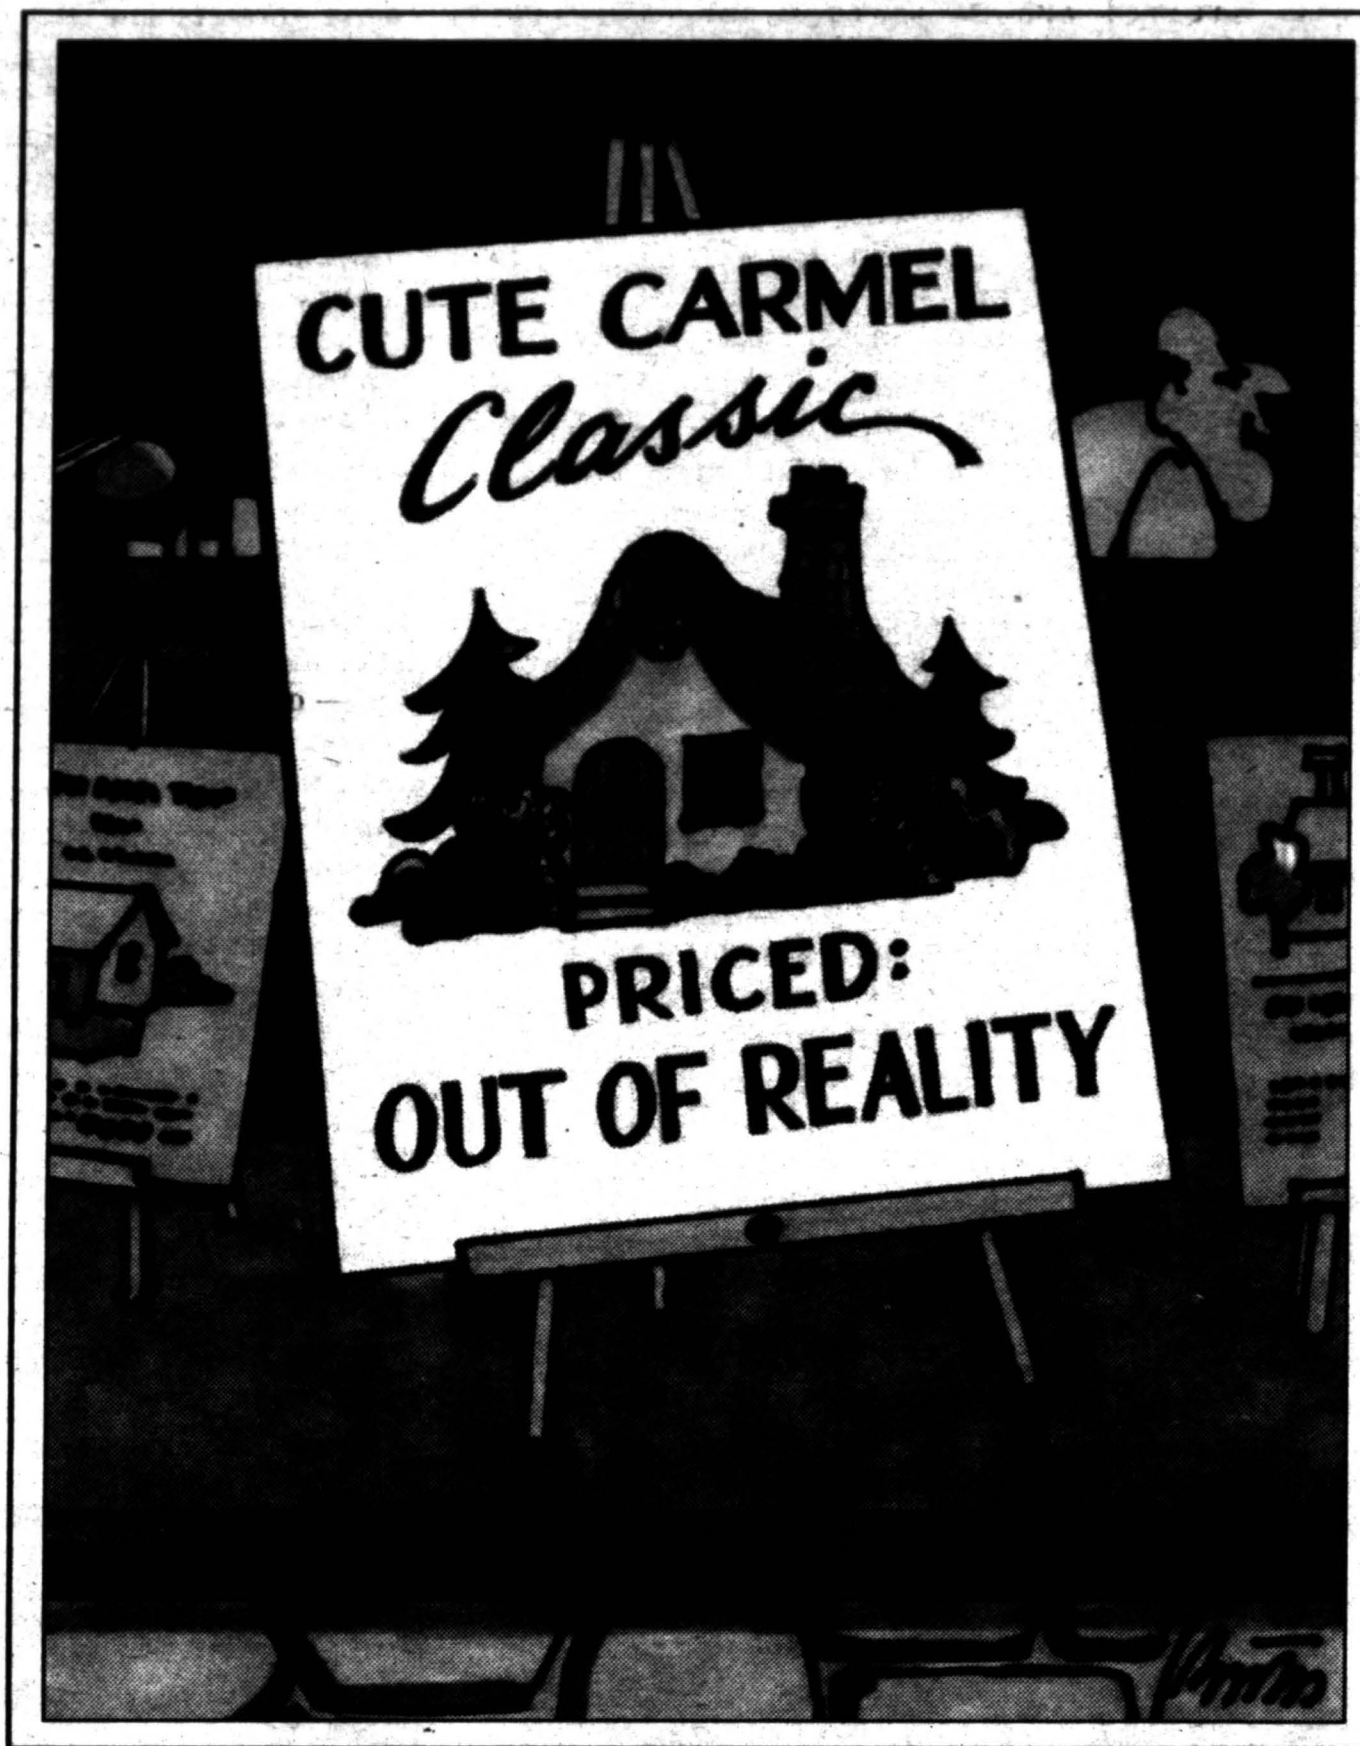

Mandatory school prayer was struck down 40 years ago by the liberal Warren court.

But in a string of recent rulings, the supposedly conservative Rehnquist court has expanded that ruling to prohibit moments of silence and voluntary prayers during the school day. And it has even banned student-led prayers at high school football games. In that 2000 case, the Supreme Court held that "the delivery of a pregame prayer has the improper effect of coercing those present to participate in an act of religious worship."

Is it unthinkable that this Supreme Court, having ruled that students must not hear a single word of prayer in any public school setting, will allow school districts to require students to listen to their classmates pledge their loyalty to a nation that is "under God"? Hardly.

In this nation's headlong rush to make sure nobody's sensibilities are ever offended, anything is possible.

Letters to the Editor

Editorial 'misses the point'

Dear Editor:

The June 21 Pine Cone editorial, "Bad laws are hard to enforce," misses the point. If bad laws are in existence, they should either be amended or eliminated, not "bent" as occurred during two appeals by property owners at the June 4 city council meeting. Monte Miller was correct in stating that "the Carmel City Council is chipping away at the character of Carmel, one vote at a time." What kind of statement do our mayor and some members of city council make when they uphold appeals after city staff and commission members have correctly interpreted municipal codes?

Interestingly enough, the same June 14 Pine Cone wrote about Eugene Hammond in Milestones. It was mentioned that the former mayor "was a strict enforcer of the general plan and ordinances, arguing that loose readings have a way of creating dangerous precedents. I am a great believer in the idea that if you don't like what's in the general plan, you should change it."

I don't think Monte Miller has "his eye already on the 2004 municipal election," but the mayor and some council members certainly appear to have it on their minds.

More importantly, dangerous precedents are now occurring with city hall overruling city staff and commission members who are trying to do their job in properly applying city code. What kind of signal does this send to city staff and commission members and what kind of support do they feel they're receiving from city administration?

Larry Rodocker, Carmel

A 'dangerous trend'

Dear Editor:

On Sunday, June 9, as I watched the Carmel City Council in action on my television set, I became very concerned at what could be a dangerous trend.

There were two appeals before the council by people who had, without requesting permission, made changes to their property which were not consistent with city code or the city's General Plan. One involved installing vinyl-clad windows, not allowed under city guidelines, and the other in placing decomposed granite in the public right of way in front of a house, which is part of Carmel's streetscape and required to be left natural or planted with native plants.

In each case, city staff and the commission involved recommended that the property owner make changes to bring their property into compliance.

However, Councilmembers McCloud, Hazdovac and Rose voted to let the window applicant replace only his front windows with wood and to let the decomposed granite remain. Councilmembers Ely and Livingston, concerned with the precedent that would be set and that long-debated city guidelines were being ignored, voted no.

Doesn't this send out a loud and clear message to the public that if you want to do something that is against city code, go ahead and do it because if you get caught, they will probably let you get away with it anyway?

I also wonder why the city should bother having commissioners with expertise who spend their time as volunteers trying to preserve the ambience of this village. It must be very discouraging for the city's professional staff and its dedicated volunteers when the council overrides their recommendations on the basis that anyone should be able to do whatever he wants with his property.

Avoiding problems with tenants

Dear Editor:

Thank you so much for alerting local landlords and property managers to be on the lookout for Kristen and Fred Adelman

(and "professional tenants").

Reporting these types of events helps prevent repetition of these episodes. Furthermore, it helps keep the limited housing we have available open for qualified tenants who are an asset to our communities.

There are a number of things landlords can do to avoid being taken advantage of by unscrupulous tenants. 1) Know the law regarding landlords and tenants; 2) be sure the door and window locks on rental property meet the requirements of the California Civil Code, as tenants can use this as a defense for non-payment of rent; 3) use a written month-to-month agreement or lease agreement that outlines all of the terms and conditions of the rental; 4) order a credit report on all applicants who are seriously being considered; 5) check the employment, references, and past landlords of all applicants who are seriously being considered; and 6) issue a notice to pay rent or quit on the day rent is late — don't wait! Finally, if the landlord lacks confidence in his ability to do any of this, a property manager can do it for a small fee. Landlords should keep in mind that it is always less expensive to have an empty property than to place the wrong tenant, as your recent article attests.

energy have found themselves hit with big surcharges.

"We have significant facilities that operate more than just eight hours a day," D'Ambrosio said. "Police and fire are open twenty-four/seven. The library is open until late in the evening. We have streetlights and all sorts of things."

Though the city took pains to retrofit most of its light fixtures and implement other conservation measures, it hasn't gotten a break from the huge surcharges.

Fermin Sanchez, owner of Bruno's Market and Deli in Carmel, said his store also went to the trouble of installing energy efficient lighting and curtains for refrigeration.

"You don't want to see my bill," Sanchez said. "They just keep adding charges upon charges. To me there has to be an end to it."

Nielsen's and Bruno's — which rely on energy-hungry freezers and refrigerators to keep their food fresh — may be the hardest hit businesses in Carmel by the surcharges.

Sutton pointed out that the combination of the huge energy surcharges and a recent 50 percent increase in workers compensation insurance is a killer for a small business owner.

"In small business you just can't pass on that overhead," Sutton said. "After 71 years, I'm going to go out of business paying off somebody's debt."

Sanchez agreed: "We don't want to pass on extra charges to our customers," he said. "So we're absorbing all of it."

While the city and Carmel's grocery stores can't ignore the huge energy tax tacked onto their bills, Sutton said businesses without much electricity usage may not have noticed the surcharges.

Still, the two grocers hoped that somehow a group of businesses could join forces to protest.

"I guess we should all get together," Sanchez said. "I don't know what we can do about it, but it should be brought to someone's attention."

One PG&E customer hit with energy surcharges of mammoth proportions is the Carmel Area Wastewater District, where huge pumps keep sewage moving through the treatment plant next to Carmel River.

District accountant Barbara Buikema was stunned to realize how high the agency's bill for just its treatment plant had climbed. A surcharge of $7,735 brought the wastewater district's bill up to $28,000 last month, Buikema said.

Next year's budget for electricity at the district will climb by nearly 50 percent, she said. "What we do is pretty energy intensive."

For now, the wastewater district and Carmel businesses see no choice but to pay the huge surcharges.

"Unfortunately if you don't pay the bill, they'll just pull the plug," Sanchez said.

Board decides big metal sign must go

A 12-SQUARE-FOOT brushed aluminum sign above a Mission Street business must go, the Carmel Design Review Board unanimously decided June 26.

The illegally installed sign was first noticed by the city last November, according to planner Shandell Healy's staff report. After five months and 15 attempts by the city to convince Downtown Neale-May to rectify the situation, the city received an application for the sign in April.

Healy recommended the board deny the sign because it does not comply with city design standards on size of materials. Business signs must be 6 square feet or smaller and be made of wood. The board agreed and ordered the store to remove the sign within five business days or face a business license revocation hearing.

Ninety days in, planning director at center of shaping Carmel

By MARY BROWNFIELD

CHRISTI DI IORIO, Carmel's planning director since February, can't complain about having nothing to do. Even as she helps the city get its mammoth Local Coastal Program certified, the housing element of its General Plan finished and historian Kent Seavey's survey completed — all by the end of the year — she also meets with applicants about their plans so they can avoid hammering out the details in front of city decision makers.

"You get to learn what works and doesn't work, and how things are in different cities," said Di Iorio (pronounced deYOReo), who took her first planning job with the City of Riverside in 1985 soon after graduating from the University of California with a master's degree in historic resource management. Her career kept her in Southern California — working for Claremont, San Juan Capistrano and the city of La Quinta — until Carmel offered her its director's job this year.

All that experience has taught Di Iorio that one of the keys to a smooth approval process lies in weeding out whatever rankles planning commissioners and design review board members.

La Quinta's planning commissioners, for instance, automatically thought "lawn" when they saw the color green on plans, regardless of what landscaping was actually intended. Since lawns sparked heated debates in her desert city, Di Iorio advised architects and designers to color their open space brown to avoid any confusion.

She hopes to help expedite the application process in Carmel as well.

"With all the development going on in the last city I worked for, you had to make decisions quickly and move quickly," she said. "To be able to identify the issues and handle the processes to get through quickly — that's one of the things I'm working on."

The differences between Carmel-by-the-Sea's one square mile and La Quinta, one of the state's fastest growing cities and home to 18,000 residents and 800-lot subdivisions, might be obvious, but Di Iorio said her new job focuses on many of the same concerns.

"Both have the same qualities in mind for elements of design," she said. "Here, it's just as busy, but on a smaller scale and a little more focused." Both seek to preserve the character inherent in their downtown and residential areas.

includes plans for state mandates on affordable housing and will be used by the state to determine if the city is doing its part, she said. Carmel must provide 46 units for residents with very low to moderate incomes.

"Here, the housing element will be different because it's a built-out community," she

Supes OK 10 more rooms for Post Ranch Inn

By MARY BROWNFIELD

PLANS TO expand Big Sur's world-famous Post Ranch Inn received unanimous support from the Monterey County Board of Supervisors June 25 after a brief public hearing. The board denied an appeal filed by neighbor Joy Stockwell, who complained of too little public input, incomplete environmental review and the negative impacts to the views and privacy on her property.

The Post Ranch plans — designed by architect Mickey Muennig — include:

- 10 new inn units;
- 24 new employee housing units;
- a yoga/exercise/spa building;
- a mercantile/gallery building;
- a services building;
- a maintenance/shop facility;
- a driveway;
- relocation of a volleyball court and picnic area;
- a public access trail; and
- improved water systems.

The inn's owners, including Myles Williams, also sought approval of new 5.5-acre parcel at the southeast corner of their property. Creation of the lot, which county documents indicate will be sold for residential development, was anticipated by a 1998 planning commission decision that allowed development rights to be moved there from a parcel on Sycamore Canyon Road. Most of the 5.5-acre parcel is in the Highway One viewshed and, under the constraints of the Big Sur Land Use Plan and a conservation easement, could not be developed. However, there are "suitable building sites outside the critical viewshed" on the parcel, according to county planner Lautaro Echiburú's staff report.

The Big Sur Land Use Advisory Committee and the minor subdivision committee recommended approval, and the Monterey County Planning Commission unanimously voted in favor of the project May 8.

Echiburú recommended the board also approve the Post Ranch expansion.

Employee housing applauded

After making a motion to approve the plan, board chairman Dave Potter complimented land use consultant Arden Handshy and the Post Ranch owners for a thoughtful, well-planned upgrade that was four years in the making and involved locals and regulators from the outset.

"It fits with the community and is a world-class facility we are all very proud of, and it's better for the environment, the community, traffic and most of all, provides employee housing," he said.

Supervisor Judy Pennycook added, "To their credit, they are already known for environmental sensitivity — they already have work-force housing and are providing more of it.

"When we see a good neighbor doing their part, we need to say a loud and clear, 'Thank you,'" she said. "I'm hopeful others will follow in their footsteps."

The Post Ranch Inn, which presently has 30 guest rooms, was built in 1989. It has become one of the most successful resort hotels in the country.

said. "You have to work with what you have."

While working on the LCP (which the California Coastal Commission will consider at its August meeting in San Luis Obispo) and preparing to update Carmel's entire General Plan and Municipal Code, Di Iorio is getting to know her staff and the appointees who make planning decisions. And they are getting to know her.

"There's been the acting director [senior planner Chip Rerig], but not a director for a while, so they're just getting used to my style," she said. "And they've been really good in helping me understand the history of everything. You have to understand how they got from A to B, because you don't want to go backward."

Outside work, Di Iorio spends her time bicycling, hiking, golfing, kayaking, and — as is the case with most people who relocate here — searching for a house nearby.

"I don't like driving far, and I like being part of the community," she said.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Woman reported she was being followed by someone she didn't know. She saw the individual, described as a male adult, parked in his vehicle near three separate businesses that she had visited. The subject stared intently at her and made her feel uncomfortable. The subject then followed her to Lincoln Street, where she contacted the department via cell phone and provided a license plate. Advised to contact the department if she saw the individual again.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report of petty theft of city property at Fifth and Perry Newberry.

TUESDAY, JUNE 18

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Civil dispute between an Ocean Avenue resident and her husband, from whom she is separated. She changed all the locks and would not allow him to pick up the rest of his belongings. He crawled through a window and retrieved the remaining personal belongings. She claimed a lawyer informed her she could file a criminal complaint regarding the entry. The two are still legally married. No restraining order or protective order on file.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report of an unwanted customer refusing to leave a San Carlos business. Customer in dispute with store owner over a credit card bill for her daughter's wedding. She was advised the subject had said she would not return.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Torres resident complained that the water fountain/pond installed in the yard south of his residence was making too much noise and disturbed him and his wife during the day.
